CLIK ELITE LUMINOUS

If you've got some serious hiking and gear-toting on your agenda, Clik Elite's Luminous pack could fit the bill. The internal camera compartment can hold a DSLR, 70–200mm and 24–70mm lenses, a flash and other accessories. As you'd expect, the camera compartment has removable and customizable foam dividers for keeping gear separated and secure. Reinforced compression straps on the exterior of the bag can hold skis, a snowboard or large tripod, and you can slip your camera strap over the bag's Clik Draw gear loop when you need to free your hands. You also get a foam-padded waist belt with a bi-directional buckle to redistribute the bag's weight around your waist.

PRICE: $289

DOMKE CHRONICLE

Part of Domke's Journalist line of photo bags, the Chronicle has three dividers that let you stash your DSLR and 70–200mm lens, plus up to three other lenses and a 9.7-inch tablet. An expandable zippered side pocket gives you room to throw in notebooks (the good old-fashioned paper kind) and voice recorders. There's space on the outside, too, with a pair of expandable front pockets and two expandable zippered pockets for tucking away memory cards, business cards and the like. It comes in canvas, Cordura, and RuggedWear versions.

ONA PRINCE STREET

Capable of stowing an 11-inch laptop or tablet, a DSLR with small lens attached, two additional lenses and a variety of small personal items, the Prince Street camera messenger bag looks as good as it feels. A thin back pocket can hold documents, while a pair of front pouches stores memory cards, batteries and other accessories. The main compartment is clasped shut using two brass buckles, while a pair of side flaps help keep inclement weather at bay. The exterior is made from weather-resistant waxed canvas and detailed with full-grain leather, while the interior's padded compartments keep your gear safe from the inevitable bumps and bruises. You can sling the bag around your torso or use the removable top-grab handle to carry it, briefcase-style, to your next assignment.

PRICE: $389 (Leather); $279 (Waxed Canvas)
